

VANITY FAIR

February 2006

With a big Hollywood movie, numerous TV specials, a Broadway musical, several new box sets of old material, and a still-to-be-released album recorded with producer Rick Rubin, there's been a lot of hubbub lately about the late Johnny Cash. One who stayed out of the public commotion was his oldest child, singer-songwriter Rosanne Cash, but now she breaks her silence with the powerful Black Cadillac. The album is dedicated to her father; her mother, Vivian Liberto Cash Distin; and her stepmother, June Carter Cash—all of whom died during the period from 2003 to 2005—and the 12 beautiful songs are, according to Cash, about anger, defiance, grief, gratitude, acceptance, denial, loss of faith, and renewal of faith.

Left, Rosanne Cash; above, an image from her album Black Cadillac.